

Online Class Schedules

Authors: Jenny Scholz, Collin Robinson, Esam Sartawi, and John Saidi

Problem statement:

Students are frustrated with adjusting to the (almost fully) online semester at college. They are struggling keeping up with the many different platforms different teachers use for classes, whether blackboard collaborate, zoom, recorded lectures on some days, it was once a simple walk to your classroom and Students are finding it time consuming and difficult to keep up with the different class schedules. Our solution should provide students with a simplified way to keep up with their class schedule.

Who is experiencing this problem?

Students around the globe who have had reduced in person class time due to Covid-19.

What is the problem?

Online class schedules are more complicated to navigate. Classes often choose to put their work on different sites causing confusion and often leading to work not being submitted on time.

Where does the problem present itself?

The problem presents itself in students who are less tech savvy.

Why does it matter?

Students should be spending their time learning and not figuring out schedules; if you're not learning you're wasting money!
